

outside suggestions to be considered in concert with other extensive information—gathered partly through the personal study missions to Latin America of individual Senators—when the subcommittee formulates its own conclusions and recommendations to the full committee. It will be the subcommittee's duty to evaluate the studies in light of the information and experience gained in the course of its inquiry. It will feel free to accept or to reject, in part or in whole, the substance of any of the reports submitted to it by the contracting organizations and institutions. •

WAYNE MORSE,
