

Mr. CONRAD. We don't. We are faced with an individual, we are interviewing him. It has to be handled on an individual basis. And from some of them we get information and from some of them we do not. But in all cases it is a voluntary cooperative effort on his part, if we do get anything.

Mr. KASS. Is it possible that he is recalling things or that his physiological responses are recalling things he is not even aware of?

Mr. CONRAD. That is remotely possible.

Mr. KASS. If, for example, you asked him the question "Do you drink coffee," and he said "Yes," but because his parents had violently prohibited him from drinking coffee, he was getting a response. How do you know what response the person is giving, whether it is the so-called voluntary response or the so-called unconscious response?

Mr. CONRAD. I don't think we have any way of knowing which it is. All we have is a response from an individual.

Mr. KASS. And you keep trying to explore it then with him until he gives you a satisfactory answer?

Mr. CONRAD. Right. We give him a chance to explain it.

Mr. MOSS. Well, gentlemen, I again want to express my appreciation for your appearance here and your cooperation. We have covered all the points originally planned for the two mornings, and it will not be necessary for you to return tomorrow morning. The committee will stand adjourned until the call of the Chair.

(Thereupon, at 12 noon the hearing was adjourned.)
