Governor Sanford. No, because the State and local governments will not have the necessary funds that must be used. We thought we were doing a pretty good job when we talked Ford into giving us $7 million and two local foundations in matching that, and we will have some other funds from other sources so that we may have $20 million over a 5-year period. But that enables us to work on comprehensive programs and in only 10 to 15 communities and do a partial job in maybe 8 or 10 more, and have maybe a single person helping do some of the job in some 25 communities. So, we simply do not have the financial resources to do the job that we see. We do not have it because, as in so many things, we do not have the tax resources that we can apply.

I think certainly in our State we have done our share in providing new taxes in the last several years to meet our share of the responsibility. I don't see how you can get at the problems of poverty in all of the communities and in all of the States without this kind of help from the Federal Government. So I think this is essential, and I must say in education or in this program or anything else we have attempted to say, "Now the Federal Government can do some things and may do some things, but we would like to get on in doing our part of the responsibility now without waiting," but with the cooperation of the Federal Government I think we could do a so much better

Mr. Landrum. Beyond the assistance that financial aid from the Federal Government will provide, is this not true that the national interest, based on the great mobility of our population and the way these problems can move from community to community and State to State, isn't that an essential reason why the Federal Government must come into this picture?

Governor Sanford. I think so. I think you have that kind of mobility now. Furthermore, the Nation has as much concern with the total resources and the total edeucation, the total human development as any State. The State has its share of the responsibility, but the total responsibility is the Federal Government's. If we had a rocket that had a noticeable 20-percent loss in efficiency because 20 percent was not working, we would start designing that 20-percent deficiency out, so that we could bring it up to peak performance. That is what we have in the Nation in terms of human resources, at least 20 percent—in our State more—at least 20-percent handicap, because 20 percent of the people are not producing anything, are not adding anything to the welfare, are not adding anything to the wealth of the Nation or the productivity of the Nation; and, worse than not adding anything, are dragging down all the rest.

I think the businessmen make a good point and a point that we have made, this is not only right because it is the humane and compassionate thing that we should do, but it is good business. These people now are not contributing and we are suggesting a small investment, relatively speaking, which will help them contribute to the free enterprise and the total economy. I think it is not only right and proper, but it is very good business.

Mr. Landrum. Now one question, directing your attention back to the job corps which you discussed in your former statement, some of the critics have suggested it would be better to provide or to leave this
