Mr. ZABLOCKI. I think it would probably justify or not justify your premise. Do you really believe that you need a 4-year authorization to get key personnel?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it will help us.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Would it be fair to assume that we do not have good Congressmen because our terms are 2-year terms?

Mr. ADAIR. Let's not go into that.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a continuing position for Congressmen and there might not be a continuing position in the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. I think there is less security for an elected Congressman than there is for a qualified person in the administrative branch of Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad to see around this table so many familiar faces.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. One additional question, Mr. Chairman, if I may. On page 3, Mr. Foster, you say that methods for testing verification procedures were formulated and pursued. Then on page 4—and to a degree you have answered this, I realize, in what you propose—you say:

Design of specialized verification and inspection instruments will become a major part of the Agency's program for the first time.

Mr. FOSTER. This is differentiating between general plans for verification and the actual development of the instruments which can carry out that which are meeting the new need which has been developed by the studies which have outlined new processes.
