

Chinese. The Russians and Chinese tend to be provincial in their associations. They do not move around very much, tending to isolate themselves from the African community. As a result, they have problems in communication with the Africans on a social basis, an important factor in developing the kind of rapport necessary to Communist objectives.