For women more than men and for younger Corpsmen more than older Corpsmen; it was the first time so far from home.

Observation: That more graduates than dropouts or discharges were away from home for the first time and yet preferred a center farther away suggests that, being more highly motivated from the start, the change of environment and the newness of the experience were real advantages for the graduates. For the less motivated dropouts and discharges the change and the newness tended to mitigate against their success in the Job Corps.
