

Mr. GOODELL. It has not? You did not dispute the point I made this morning?

Mr. KELLY. No.

Mr. GOODELL. Dr. Gottlieb, you said 40 percent of the Job Corps graduates got jobs in a skill for which they were trained; is that correct?

Dr. GOTTLIEB. Yes; related to their training.

Mr. GOODELL. My statement was only 25 percent of those working in jobs for which they were trained. You have given an additional statistic, what they got when they first came out the door of the Job Corps.

It doesn't contradict my statistic at all, but just raises the figure of 40 percent. I believe my statement is accurate and I would like to know if you believe this is accurate according to your records.

Dr. GOTTLIEB. I am sorry. I misinterpreted what you had said, sir.

Mr. GOODELL. Then it is accurate that 25 percent are working in jobs for which they were trained.

Dr. GOTTLIEB. I can look into that, but I have no way of answering that because I don't have that data available right this moment.

Mr. GOODELL. This is right in your Harris poll. It is one of the most significant statistics from the Harris poll.

Dr. GOTTLIEB. That is a problem because references are made to the Harris polls and you have asked for them and there isn't one, there isn't two, there isn't three; there are four, sir.

Mr. GOODELL. Fine.

Dr. GOTTLIEB. And people casually say the Harris survey, and I tell you we are hard pressed to know which one and what page, but we have them all here for you.

Mr. GOODELL. Mr. Gottlieb, I want to be constructive and friendly, but I see red when you start blaming me because I haven't seen those Harris polls.

Ask how many of the members of the committee have seen those Harris polls and how many of them have been trying to see them!

I have here a summary of the Harris polls which we obtained by sending our investigators down. With great resistance they had to take photocopies and copy them and take summaries of this. I would have been just delighted had you, 3 or 4 months ago, been so anxious for me to see those Harris polls and I think on both sides of the aisle we would have been delighted.

I am sorry to lose my temper, but I think we are all trying here to do a job, to enlighten ourselves and Congress and the people and improve this legislation.

If I quoted out of context, I apologize, but I have a photocopy of a page here that does not seem to be out of context that gives that statistic.

Dr. GOTTLIEB. Yes, sir.

Chairman PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODELL. Yes; I will be delighted to.

Chairman PERKINS. I think, Doctor, at this point that 90 percent of the youngsters that you enroll in the Job Corps do not have a high school education. The vocational education schools throughout the country have in the past never been able to do anything about this
