show that amphetamines currently are not widely prescribed or abused in Illinois. Statistics obtained from the Illinois Bureau of Investigation and Diversion Investigation Unit tend to substantiate this, as they have had no significant cases involving large-scale abuse of amphetamines. The prescribing in this area has been substituted significantly by prescriptions written for Preludin and Ritalin, two drugs that currently do not require the issuance of a state triplicate prescription, and produce essentially the same results. The States of Indiana and Wisconsin currently have no triplicate prescription system.
