

real problem in allowing them to come in. Sometimes they help to prove some of the things you have been telling us all along.

Dr. GOERKE. This is true but I think the conditions of the operation are something that somebody should take a closer look at.

Mr. GIBBONS. Thank you.

Mr. QUIE. That is all.

Mrs. GREEN. Congressman Gibbons, would you like more time?

Mr. GIBBONS. Yes; I would like to ask what type of programs we are conducting in Florida now or have we conducted?

Dr. GOERKE. Let me get my folder out.

Mr. GIBBONS. Perhaps you could give me an idea or sketch of what areas they cover?

Dr. GOERKE. Right. The State plan as developed by the advisory committee in the board of regents office—we have only one member on that committee—the board of education and board of regents deals primarily with five problem areas. One, human relations, particularly geared to migrant farmworkers and Cuban refugee problems in the Miami and Tampa areas. Second, public administration. For instance, there are programs developing with the east-central Florida planning area.

Some of the problems there are involved with the rapid growth and the need for community leadership for education and public responsibilities.

The third major area, economic development and full-time employment. Fourth, human resources, which covers family development problems of the aged.

Mr. GIBBONS. I asked for broad categories. In the remaining amount of time we have here, could we get specific. Tell me something about the length of the courses and the number of times they meet, the types of participants, and what they are actually teaching.

Dr. GOERKE. I have to start first by saying these are not necessarily courses.

Mr. GIBBONS. I realize that. I just use courses in a descriptive sense.

Dr. GOERKE. The University of Miami in Coral Gables has put together what they call an urban extension coordinating center; their major effort is to provide adult continuing education courses, institutes, and services to adults at all levels, directed primarily to creating a better urban environment.

Mr. GIBBONS. That is a broad one; can we get specific?

Dr. GOERKE. There is a counseling center for the continuing education of women housed in Dade County. Thirteen institutions of higher education are working on this. This counseling is for women going into the labor market, or women college graduates coming out for counseling, and possible placement in one educational situation or another.

They have begun to branch out and work with the disadvantaged as they add staff and counsel these people, particularly those with educational experience.

It is a matter of where they are and where they would like to go.

Florida State has an urban internship program in extension where they are sending out from their public administration program at Florida State interns into the east and central regions as counselors to work with these people, structuring educational experience for pub-
