

The fact that scientists of different countries are joining forces within the framework of the IBP presents an unprecedented opportunity to study the productivity of the organic world of all our planet and the factors conditioning this productivity, with the goal of rational use of the production of organic matter for the needs of humanity.