Statistics show that college graduates earn many thousands of dollars more during their lifetime than non-graduates. The financial advantage alone makes a college degree a good investment, but higher education also carries with it such additional values as added prestige, job and community opportunities, personal satisfaction, and self-confidence.

With college costs rising annually, there are few families who can finance a college education without assistance. However, scholarships, loans and other sources make it possible for almost every ambitious and deserving young person to earn a college degree.
