

The Use of Attorneys and Accountants - Modern legislations have created an extremely complex legal system in every state in this country and in the Federal Government system which controls every individual in this country. It has been estimated by the Yale Law School that well over one million laws affect every single individual in the country from the time of their birth until the time of their death. These laws emanate from not only the U. S. Congress and the hundreds of agencies that are formed and administered by the President of the United States, but also those created and governed by state legislators and governors; by county commissioners and county management boards; by city councils, local real estate tax commissions; consolidated district boards (most commonly found in rural school systems); zoning boards; and the hundreds and thousands of other small government-like agencies that derive their power from various laws and regulations. It has been estimated that a citizen living in a suburb of Chicago, Illinois may be subject to the laws and regulations of over 117 lawmaking bodies, such as, elementary school districts, high school districts, junior college school districts, city water commissions, county water commissions, county sewage
