

EXHIBIT 2QUESTION AND ANSWER #3

FOUNDATIONS ARE FOR CHARITABLE PURPOSES.

You are right, there are many foundations which have been created for charitable purposes, and the common use of the term "charitable" has led many people to feel that all foundations are created for this purpose. However, the not-for-profit laws that are in use by all of the states have many other purposes for which foundations may be established. Some of these are research, education, religious, cultural purposes, promoting civic activities, developing the health and welfare of the nation, testing for public safety and also in raising the general standard of living. This of course means that you can establish a not-for-profit corporation, using any or all of these different purposes that would best suit your activities and desires. This is one of the reasons why so many people want to understand how they can establish foundations within the law.
