Colonel KIEFFER. Thank you, sir. I won't take the committee's time to discuss the first two or three pages of the written statement. That has been submitted beyond mentioning that there are two types of European summer schools which are operated both on a secondary and a college level.

The first type employs the words "school", "study", "educational program", "educational tour" in their names, but are not schools in the educational sense. They are not authorized to issue credit nor are their certificates accepted for credit.

They hold very few, if any, formal classes and are, in effect, summer tourist agencies existing for the purpose of attracting students for what used to be called the grand tour of Europe for those who do not wish to pursue any active academic work or who do not realize that any work that they may take will not be accepted for credit.
