

Here is the way the concrete wall looks when you are up close, and of course, I-bolts here to hold the cables for the California-type barrier system. That anchorage, of course, is a necessary part of this system's working, but it is rather unusual that you have three types of barrier here, and as you stop and look at that, you find that there really is not very much reason that you can see for continuing this.

This is done not just at this location but up here [indicating] and at still another place, so that you have this rail which obstructs the clear shoulder for one thing. You have this cable rail which does its
