GUIDE TO RESTRICTIVE CODES (cont.)

- * - Commodities for which there is de facto discrimination against imports from the U.S. Where method of discrimination is not indicated by footnotes it derives from the practice (with few exceptions) of specifying Eastern European Countries as sources of supply on the tenders which are issued for imports. This discrimination against the U.S. may be variable. For example, eligible sources in the case of feed grains are sometimes limited to Eastern Bloc countries to help clear bilateral accounts. In other cases procurement is on a much wider basis, including the United States.
