

Mr. DANIELS. I would like before concluding, however, to insert a few things into the record so that our testimony can be complete.

First, I would like to insert an article from the Textile World of May 1968 headlined, "Index Up 15 Points Over Year Ago," in which this trade journal, which is a leading publication in the field and certainly one well respected by the domestic industry, points out that the textile industry is now producing and operating at peak capacity, that they are now at 96 percent of capacity, which is their preferred rate, and that they will break all previous records for production.

I would also like to introduce from the same publication, however from the February 1968 issue, a survey of the outlook for 1968 in which this publication predicts a very remarkable year for the industry.

I would also like to introduce what we have found most interesting reports by financial analysts on the textile industries. I would like to insert these as they appear, inserted into the Congressional Record by the Honorable Joseph D. Tydings, Senator from Maryland, with a speech and the reports.

And finally, I do think that the committee would be interested in an article appearing in the Monthly Labor Review prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor, entitled "Technology and Labor in the Textile Industry" which I think gives the lie to some of the arguments we have heard concerning employment, the impact of imports, and the employment outlook for this industry.

Mr. LANDRUM (presiding). Without objection they will be included at this point in the record.
