

and meat food product manufacturers cannot attribute alleged industry problems to import volume.

A full and complete review of facts surrounding U.S. production, imports of fresh chilled and frozen meats, importation of live cattle, indiscriminate feeding practices, and the continuing needs of the consuming public, will prove that the present quota is adequate and that additional artificial barriers to free trade in meat products would be contrary to the national interest.