

Chart 1. Multiple Jobholding Rates for Men
25 to 54 Years Old, May 1966

Financial pressure, however, is not the only reason why workers moonlight. There are several other considerations. Some workers with a regular wage or salary job want to continue or try their hand at working for themselves on a part-time basis while still maintaining their basic source of income. One-third of the multiple jobholders are self-employed on their second job. They moonlight at their own business or devote a few hours to providing some professional service in their spare time without committing large resources or all their time to the venture. Moreover, the fact that half of this self-employed group operates a farm as their second job suggests that some of these dual jobholders have chosen not to abandon the farm way of life even though economic reasons force
