

yes, the effect of the supplemental appropriation last year in the major cities, which could not be matched without a supplemental appropriation. That is about the closest I could come to it.

Senator JAVITS. I think that is excellent, Mr. Secretary. I am very pleased you should be helpful to that extent.

Would you be kind enough to supply for the record the statistical substantiation for this statement?

Secretary WIRTZ. Very well.

Senator JAVITS. I ask unanimous consent.

Chairman PROXMIRE. Without objection.

Senator JAVITS. I might say, Mr. Secretary, as you know, my burning interest is—I think one of the reasons we avoided so far the dire eventualities in my city, New York, that were compounded in other major cities like Detroit, is the fact that our mayor was ready with a summer program when he got it funded, and gave a very considerable number of jobs. And I think it is critically important this year as it was last.

We have not yet come abreast of the basic problems of slums and ghettos adequately to dispense with this kind of emergency treatment. But, I will not press you further. I understand the limitations perfectly upon you as a Cabinet officer.

I have just one other line of questions I would like to ask you.

We are told that a number of programs must be undertaken to deal
