

CONFERENCE ON ECONOMIC PROGRESS

By LEON H. KEYSERLING,¹ PRESIDENT

CONTENTS

	Page
Introduction.....	767
Chapter I. SUSTAINING PROSPERITY: RECORD AND PROSPECTS
CEA's excessive optimism about economic growth performance.....	767
CEA's inadequate awareness of excessive unemployment.....	768
CEA's neglect of problem of economic equilibrium.....	769
CEA's bias with respect to wage trends.....	770
CEA's low targets for the future.....	772
Chapter II. THE STRATEGY OF STABILIZATION POLICY
Self-praise may be slight recommendation.....	774
Wrong diagnosis and wrong cure, 1966-67.....	774
Still wrong, 1967-68.....	775
Failure to resist wayward monetary policy.....	775
Chapter III. THE PROBLEM OF RISING PRICES
Price trends are not very meaningful per se.....	776
Price trends significant in their impact upon resource and income allocation.....	777
CEA exaggerates inflationary trends.....	777
Price trends in an international perspective.....	778
A higher growth rate and less unemployment do not import more inflation.....	778
Other flaws in CEA cost-push thesis.....	780
Comment on new Cabinet Committee on Price Stability.....	780
Coordinating public and private economic policies.....	781
CHAPTER IV. ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND INDIVIDUAL OPPORTUNITY
Interplay of economic and social problems.....	782
Ineffectual CEA treatment of economic-social issues.....	782
The issue of what the Federal Government can afford.....	783
The issue of urban-rural balance.....	783
The issue of the war against poverty.....	783
The issue of housing and urban renewal.....	784
Minimum ambits of CEA responsibility.....	784
CHAPTER V. THE INTERNATIONAL ECONOMY
Balance-of-payments problem grossly exaggerated.....	785
We should run a much larger unfavorable balance of payments.....	785
Our international goods and services account.....	786
Methods of accounting need recasting.....	787
The unworkability of settlement in gold.....	787
Comments on Economic Report of the President.....	788

¹ Former Chairman, Council of Economic Advisers; consulting economist, and attorney.