Canon Carr is an ardent believer in the effectiveness of the Christian Church as a reconciling influence in building peace and justice in Africa. Addressing his first meeting of the All Africa Conference of Churches Executive Committee in Kinshasa in October, 1971, he said :

Our objective is to discover how we can be faithful to God and His demands to build His Kingdom of Justice and Peace in Africa today. We are joined in this task by fellow Christians in Southern Africa, whose fate is no better than our own, even if they are white. We have a solemn duty to liberate them from living a life of fear. As such we cannot allow the repressive regimes of South Africa, Angola, Mozambique, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and Guinea Bissau to divide the Church in Africa, and alienate us on the basis of race. We must spare no effort to witness to the truth that in Jesus Christ, there is neither White nor Black, African nor Afrikaans. This must be the basis for our continued dialogue with those parts of our constituency in Southern Africa.

Concluding his statement to the United Nations Security Council Special Session held in Addis Ababa, January 28th to February 4th, 1972, he told the Council :
